Government Promotion Of the Homosexual Religion When John Kennedy, a Catholic, ran for president in 1964 there was a concern he might promote the unique beliefs of the Roman Catholic religion if elected President. When Mitt Romney, a Mormon, ran for president in 2012 some Americans had the same concern about his Mormon religious beliefs. In 1968 a homosexual minister established a new church, the Metropolitan Community Church. Contrary to historical religious and societal beliefs, the new prophet proclaimed that homosexuality was moral, not immoral. Based on that belief, “same-sex marriage equality” logically became a foundation doctrine of the homosexual religion and he began performing same-sex weddings. February 15, 1970, the New York Times published an article titled, “Homosexuals in Los Angeles, Like Many Elsewhere, Want Religion and Establish Their Own Church,” documenting the beginning of the new homosexual religion. This book proves that actions by the Executive Branch of the Federal Government and the recent ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court to nationalize “same-sex marriage” promote the unique beliefs and moral standard of the homosexual religion. All executive orders issued, all sexual orientation anti-discrimination laws passed, and all judicial judgments rendered which give special rights and privileges to individuals who believe, practice and promote the unique doctrine of the homosexual Metropolitan Community Church, violate the 1st Amendment to the US Constitution's prohibition on government promotion of a particular religion and are unconstitutional.
