The Kolb LSI is a statistically reliable and valid 12-item assessment tool. Based on experiential learning theory, it identifies preferred learning styles, and explores the opportunities that different styles present for problem solving, teamwork, conflict resolution, communication (work and home), and career choice. The LSI, version 3 is the most recent version of the premier learning style instrument developed in 1976. It features 1) an experiential design that takes participants through the Cycle of Learning, 2) real-life applications that allow participants to apply this knowledge to their important issues, and 3) practical styles for developing styles that are weak. The Four Learning Styles: Diverging: combines preferences for experiencing and reflecting Assimilating: combines preferences for reflecting and thinking Converging: combines preferences for thinking and doing Accommodating: combines preferences for doing and experiencing General information about the assessment: The LSI is a self-scored assessment. It is available here on paper or it can be taken online. It is available in English, French and Spanish. A facilitators guide is available for those who have not facilitated the LSI before. Complimentary PowerPoint slides are available to those who purchase the assessment. Call 1 800 729 8074 for details. Please note - this item is sold in Packages of 10 booklets.
